Many Online Learning students will agree that the most difficult part of taking classes online is keeping yourself motivated. With online classes, students must take the initiative to complete courses completely on their own, so it can be easy for them to become distracted or discouraged in their work. Use these five motivational tips to stay on task:

1. Discuss What You Learn. Find a friend or relative who has similar interests or who would enjoy hearing about your studies and let them know what’s going on in your classes. You’ll understand the material better when you have a chance to explain it out loud and will be motivated to stay on task in order to keep up with the conversation.

2. Chart Your Progress. Don’t rely on campus counselors: design your own map of completed classes and post it somewhere that is visible daily. There’s a certain satisfaction that comes with watching your goals be accomplished. When times get hard, you can always turn to your chart and see how far you’ve come.

3. Reward Yourself. You get rewarded for good credit and safe driving, why shouldn’t you reward yourself for doing well in your coursework? Whether it be a night out with friends, a new dress, or even a new car, setting up a reward system may just be the extra push you need to succeed. If you stick by your system, you may find yourself pleasantly surprised.

4. Take Time for Fun. If you’re spending all your time working, studying and watching after the kids, you’ll likely suffer in all areas. Everyone needs some down time to re-group. So, set aside a little time every week for a favorite activity. You’ll be more productive and able to focus better during class and study time.

According to a report published by the College Board and the Babson Survey Research Group, over 6 million students are currently taking at least one class online. This number indicates almost one-third of higher-education students in the U.S. are now taking at least one course over the internet, over 560,000 more than in 2010.

Online Course Development Tips

Unlike teaching a traditional course, you’ll need to plan a little differently when teaching online. It’s difficult to be as spontaneous as you could be when teaching face-to-face. Reconciling with this idea, will leave you less frustrated. Course development is a continual process which typically takes at least a semester to complete.

As you are working on your course, here are some helpful tips:

Online Videos
Cognitive information processing (CIP) research (Mayer, 2001 & 2005), suggest that information should be broken into smaller more manageable pieces or “chunks.” Limiting the length of videos helps with student motivation and retention. Here are some additional recommendations: https://www.edx.org/blog/how-mooc-video-production-affects.
Check understanding by including questions after video lectures that students need to respond to. After reviewing the lecture, the student responds to questions on a discussion board or through a quiz. Students can respond to other students' responses as well.

Syllabus
Adding the syllabus in an accessible MS Word Document, allows students to access the information in multiple ways. Please see the attached for an assessable syllabus template. If you are having students follow a certain sequence in the course, make sure to inform students, in the syllabus or in your welcome message, that they have to go through the material in order. Many students will skip straight to a quiz or assessment without reviewing prerequisite information like a video or reading.

Discussion Postings
Give students time each week to reflect on the content and respond to discussion postings and their peers. As an instructor you can respond to key information and submit a summary of major discussion points. "Frequent student-faculty contact in and out of classes is the most important factor in student motivation and involvement."
Require students to apply lecture material to a case study, problem set, or real-world application, instead of passively watching the lecture. In addition, student groups can take case studies presented in the lecture and do additional research and follow-up.

Synchronous (Live) Meetings
An online course can still have synchronous meetings through web conferencing technologies. Unless noted when students register for a course as required, these meetings will need to be optional. However, I have seen most students attend if they are available. Those who cannot attend can view a recording of the interaction.

Accessibility
Recognizing and eradicating obstacles is what accessibility is all about. Accessibility of content is not only a best practice in developing online courses, but in some circumstances it has become a legal issue. It is most important that learners can access the material, so understanding the learners and thinking about potential barriers is key. You can increase the accessibility of your course by adding captions and transcripts for audio and videos and adding alternate text to your images.
Involving Faculty From Square One Is Critical to Launching New and Innovative Programs

Higher education leaders often face a great deal of pressure to launch new and innovative programs that make use of emerging technologies coming into the higher education environment. However, these programs are often launched under great internal scrutiny with minimal input from faculty, staff and students. In this interview, Judith Pirani discusses some of the common misconceptions that tend to accompany new and innovative online programming and shares her thoughts on what post-secondary leaders can do to get buy-in from faculty.

The 8 Minutes That Matter Most

The eight minutes that matter most are the beginning and endings. If a lesson does not start off strong by activating prior knowledge, creating anticipation, or establishing goals, student interest wanes, and you have to do some heavy lifting to get them back. If it fails to check for understanding, you will never know if the lesson's goal was attained. Here are eight ways to make those eight minutes magical.

Welcome to Canvas!

Beginning in January with the start of the Spring 2015 semester, Canvas became the new Learning Management System to replace Angel. Here are some important Canvas tips:

Canvas and Canvas Mobile allow you to easily access your courses, check your “To-Do” list, and set up notifications of upcoming assignments, exams and grade postings.

Step 1 All users should log in and set their Notification Preferences. These settings tell Canvas how to communicate with you regarding things like announcements, due dates, course mail, etc. Please watch the video in the Canvas Resources course to learn more. Your UAH email account is already linked to the system, and you can add other email addresses or your cell phone number to receive text messages as well.

Step 2 All users should go over how to set up your Canvas mobile app. If you are interested in using the Canvas mobile app, there is information for each of the major mobile platforms in the Canvas Resources course as well.

To access Canvas, go to http://canvas.uah.edu and log in with your Charger ID and Password.

For help with Canvas, use the help link at the top right within Canvas to submit a HD ticket. Or you may contact the OIT Help Desk for support concerning Canvas, Panopto, or any other technical services that are supported at UAH.
