E-mail: ssfellowship@popcouncil.org

Deadline: December 15

The Population Council Fellowships in the Social Sciences, administered by the Policy Research Division, support work leading to a doctoral degree, postdoctoral research, or mid-career training in the population field. The fellowships are for one year of research, except in the case of postdoctoral fellowships, which are made for two years. Fields of Study Fellowships will be awarded for advanced training in population studies, including demography and public health, in combination with a social science discipline, such as economics, sociology, anthropology, or geography. Awards will be made only to applicants whose proposals deal with the developing world. Applications are accepted for four types of training programs in population: three levels of training at degree-granting institutions of higher learning and one at the Population Council. Pre-doctoral training: Awards are open to candidates who have completed all coursework requirements toward a PhD or an equivalent degree in demography or one of the social sciences. Applications requesting support for either the dissertation fieldwork or the dissertation write-up will be considered. Postdoctoral training: Awards are open to candidates from the developing world with a minimum of five years of substantial professional experience in the population field. Mid-career awards are open to scholars with a PhD or an equivalent degree wishing to undertake specific study in connection with a research institution. Resident training: The Bernard Berelson award, for training at the postdoctoral or mid-career level at the Population Council, is open to candidates with a PhD or an equivalent degree in demography or population studies. Awards are open to all qualified persons, but preference will be given to applicants from developing countries who have a firm commitment to return home upon completion of their training programs. The typical award is for 12 months, and is non-renewable. In the case of postdoctoral training, the award is made for two years.

Ford Foundation

The Ford Foundation International Fellowships Program (IFP) provides opportunities for advanced study to exceptional individuals who will use this education to become leaders in their respective fields, furthering development in their own countries and greater economic and social justice worldwide. To ensure that Fellows are drawn from diverse backgrounds, IFP will actively recruit candidates from social groups and communities that lack systematic access to higher education. The International Fellowships Program provides support for up to three years of formal graduate-level study. Fellows will be selected from countries in Asia, Africa, the Middle East, Latin America and Russia, where the Ford Foundation maintains active overseas programs. U.S. Nationals are not eligible, although Fellows may study in the United States. Fellows may enroll in masters or doctoral programs and may pursue any academic discipline or field of study in the following areas: Children, Youth and Family, Sexuality and Reproductive Health, Work-Force Development, Development Finance and Economic Security, Environment and Development, Community Development, Education Reform, Higher Education and Scholarship, Religion, Society and Culture, Media, Arts and Culture, Human Rights, International Cooperation, Governance, and Civil Society. The Foundation currently works in 15 fields to strengthen democratic values, reduce poverty and injustice, promote international cooperation, and advance human achievement. The program will provide placement assistance to those Fellows not yet admitted to graduate school. IFP support will enable Fellows to undertake short-term language study and training in research and computer skills prior to graduate school enrollment. Ford Fellows must: Demonstrate excellence in their undergraduate studies and hold a baccalaureate degree or its equivalent, have experience in community service or development-related activities, pursue a post-baccalaureate degree that will directly enhance their leadership in an academic, policy, practical, or artistic discipline or field corresponding to one or more of the Foundation's areas of endeavor, present a plan specifying how they will apply their studies to social problems or issues in their own countries, and commit themselves to working in these issues following the fellowship period.

The objective of the Science Fellowships program is to prepare for the long-term future by training young researchers. Science fellowships provide opportunities for scientists of NATO's Partner countries to pursue their research work or continue their training in a NATO country, and vice-versa. There are a limited number of fellowships available in some countries for NATO-country scientists to study in another NATO country. The duration of the fellowships offered varies by type and country. The typical length of basic fellowships is one year, with renewal in certain cases; the duration of advanced fellowships ranges three to twenty-four months; and senior fellowships, three months. Each NATO country decides on the type of fellowship and the level of financial support it offers to individual fellows, as well as deciding on which scientific fields and professions it will support. The criteria for selection and the eligibility conditions therefore vary by country, but independent committees of senior scientists judge all applications on scientific merit. Science fellows usually choose the subject of research or study. The amount of a fellowship varies by country and depends on the length of tenure. Usually NATO Science Fellowships cover travel and living costs, but not all countries offer all types of fellowships. Applicants from NATO countries should make inquiries of or submit applications to the National Administrator in the country of which they are nationals, regardless of present residence. (For a list of National Administrators, please see web site)

Various scholarships are available for students majoring in geophysics or a related field and directed towards a career in exploration geophysics. Any recognized college or university in the United States or its possessions which offers courses of study in geophysics or a closely related field may be chosen by the recipients, subject to requirements for admission and any restrictions specified by the sponsor. Administration of each scholarship is turned over to the school attended by the recipient. General requirements for eligibility are that the applicant must intend to pursue a college course directed toward a career in exploration geophysics; the applicant must have an interest in and aptitude for physics, mathematics, and geology; and the applicant must be one of the following: (a) A high school student with above average grades planning to enter college the next fall term, (b) an undergraduate college student whose grades are above average or (c) a graduate college student whose studies are directed toward a career in exploration geophysics in operations, teaching, or research; need of financial assistance will be considered. However, the competence of the student as indicated by the application is given first consideration. The Tom Mazza Scholarship and the Chevron Scholarship are available for study at any US college or university; the Tim Long Scholarship is open to any Georgia Institute of Technology applicant; the Veritas DGC Scholarship is open to exploration geophysics majors; the Carl Savit Scholarship is available to graduate students, and the Lucien LaCoste Scholarship is open to any full-time graduate student specializing in gravity exploration.
