Take Yourself to Work Day: Local Professionals Partner with Students for Career Fair, Panel Discussion, and Workshops

Wednesday, November 5, will find the lobby of the new Shelby Center at UAHuntsville filled with representatives from a variety of professions, companies, and organizations. "Take Yourself to Work Day" will include a luncheon panel discussion by prominent local women leaders, a career fair, and workshops on building professional skills. The event especially targets women students and professionals and was initiated by Women's Studies students who requested career guidance for students in the arts and sciences.

The luncheon will be held in the Shelby Center third-floor faculty lounge from 12 to 1:30 pm. It will feature a panel of successful local women talking about their career paths and how they achieved their career goals. Panelists are Dr. Pam Hudson, CEO of Crestwood Hospital; Monty Vest, Director of Communications, JANSON Communications; the honorable Laura Hall, state representative for district 19; and Joanne Randolph, President, Women's Business Center of North Alabama. Moderator for the panel discussion will be Liz Hurley, WAFF 48 news anchor. Panelists will respond to questions developed by UAHuntsville students on the planning committee. UAHuntsville Student Affairs is sponsoring the luncheon.

The career fair will be in the Shelby Center lobby from 10 am to 3 pm. Local professionals will host tables where students may talk with them about their career paths and receive career advice.

A Doll's House Opens October 22

UAHuntsville Theatre, with support from the English Department and Women's Studies Program, will present Henrik Ibsen's classic play, A Doll's House, October 22-26, in Chan Auditorium of the Business Administration Building.

Directed by Shannon Graham, the play explores a time of women's growing social discontent through the characters of Nora and Torvald. The earliest of Ibsen's social-problem plays, A Doll's House catapulted him to international recognition. Combining technique and content in the play's realism, he employed natural dialogue and situations and pushed the plot to its logical outcome.

Harris Paper Contest Awards Academic and Creative Writing

The Women's Studies Program will sponsor the ninth annual Kathryn L. Harris Women's Studies Paper Competition, which awards prizes for essays written for a graduate or undergraduate course at UAHuntsville that deal substantially with women or women's issues.

The competition awards in two categories: academic and creative. Each category offers a first prize of $100 and a second prize of $50. The winners will be honored at Liberal Arts Honors Day, April 7.

Last year's winners in the academic category were, first, Kyra Gordon, "Burden of Promise: The Impact of Soviet Political Posters on the Shaping of Female Identity" (for HY 392 Europe Since 1815, Dr. Molly Johnson); and, second, Gloria Powell, "Man: Woman's Savior or God Usurper?" (for EH 360 Shakespeare, Dr. Jeff Nelson).

The winners in the creative category were, first, Candace Grissom, short story, "The Cultivation of Violets" (for EH 510 Advanced Fiction Writing, Dr. Sena Jeter Naslund); and, second, Cindy Small, short story, "Dying in Sequins," (for EH 510 Advanced Fiction Writing, Dr. Sena Jeter Naslund).

Essays may be submitted to Erin Reid in the Department of Sociology (344 Morton Hall) by March 2. For more information, contact Dr. Angela Balla at (256) 824-2378 or Dr. Christine Sears at (256) 824-2573, or visit the contest website at http://www.uah.edu/womensstudies/essay_college.htm.

Hindman Award Honors High-School Student for Outstanding Artwork

The 2008 UAHuntsville Ruth Hindman Women's Studies Award was presented to Alexa Werling of Catholic High School for her composition, "Conformity." The Department of Art and Art History selected the winner for artistic merit and significant insight concerning women and gender.

According to Alexa's artist's statement, the piece "presents an aesthetically pleasing rendering of the brutality of American culture and media and its effects on the everyday woman while offering hope that it can and will be overcome."

The Hindman Award was presented on April 17 during the College of Liberal Arts Tournament Day, which fosters academic and creative excellence among area high-school students. The Ruth Hindman Foundation awarded Alexa a check for $100.

Women's Studies Honors Outstanding Emerging Woman Artist

"Gender Politics from the Blue Woman," by Ashley Pottenger

The 2008 Women's Studies Outstanding Emerging Woman Artist Award was presented to Art major Ashley Pottenger on April 7 for her painting, "Gender Politics from the Blue Woman." The award is part of the Annual UAHuntsville Juried Student Art Exhibition sponsored by the Department of Art and Art History. The award seeks to foster women's professional development in the visual arts.

Ashley's piece explores issues of gender ambiguity and androgyny. It was selected for the award by guest juror Brian Bishop, professor of painting at the University of Alabama, Tuscaloosa.

The Women's Studies Program awarded Ashley a check for $100.

Women's Studies Awards Harris Scholarship and Outstanding Minor

The Women's Studies Program awarded the 2008 Kathryn L. Harris scholarship to Heather Harwell, Sarah Ragan, and Veronica Ferreira. Heather and Sarah are both sociology majors with minors in women's studies. Veronica is a double major in history and sociology with a minor in women's studies.

The scholarship is awarded based on a combination of academic merit, community and/or school involvement, with additional consideration given to students with demonstrated financial need.

Heather and Sarah are officers in POWER, the Women's Studies student organization, and the Student Sociology Association. Veronica is an officer in Phi Alpha Theta, the history honors society, and a leader in the PASS program.

Veronica was also honored at the College of Liberal Arts Honors Day, April 8, with the Women's Studies Outstanding Minor Award, for academic excellence.

UAHuntsville Distinguished Student Leader Award Goes to POWER President

The UAHuntsville Student Government Association presented its award for Distinguished Student Leader for an Academic/Honorary Club and Organization to Sarah Ragan, president of POWER, the Women's Studies student organization. Sarah's work with POWER revitalized the club, nurtured new membership, and promoted service on campus and in the community. Under her leadership, POWER provided vital support for Women's Studies events and built ties with community organizations like Habitat for Humanity, the American Association of University Women (AAUW), and the Women's Economic Development Council (WEDC).

Huntsville Woman's Club Renews Award

The Huntsville Woman's Club renewed its $1,000 memorial scholarship to UAHuntsville student Amanda Shamblin in May. Amanda is a double major in communication arts and foreign languages, specializing in Spanish. She received the Woman's Club Award initially last year and is a return recipient.

POWER Student Leaders Promote Service and Activism

The UAHuntsville Women's Studies student organization, POWER, is planning humanitarian events on campus and in the community.

In addition to collaborating with AAUW and AAMU on a panel discussion on race, gender, and politics in October, they are helping organize the "Take Yourself to Work" career fair in November, which was their brainchild to serve students in career decisions. Members also volunteered for the Susan G. Komen race for the cure, a benefit for breast cancer research, in Birmingham, and are planning a rape crisis advocacy program on campus.

POWER (People Organized for Women's Equality and Rights) is committed to working for equality and rights concerning sex, race, age, religion, sexual orientation, physical ability, and class through service, student activities, scholarship, and activism. POWER's leadership includes president Sarah Ragan, vice-president Heather Harwell, treasurer Rebecca Purcell, secretary Jennifer Harris, and faculty sponsor Dr. Angela Balla.

Women Student Leaders Attend National Conference

The 2008 National Conference for College Women Student Leaders (NCCWSL)—“Leadership For Today and Tomorrow”—welcomed a diverse crowd of more than 500. UAHuntsville students Heather Harwell, Rachel Lackey, and Sarah Ragan, and alumnus Candice Rigsby Bressler attended the Washington D.C. event with support from UAHuntsville and AAUW.

Participants enhanced their leadership skills, explored diverse perspectives, and networked with their peers. The conference featured more than 40 workshops, in addition to pre- and post-conference sessions, such as Washington D.C. tours, election 2008 sessions, and opportunities to participate in the Susan G. Komen Race for the Cure.

A highlight of the conference was the Women of Distinction Awards Ceremony, which featured five award winners, including journalist Kimberly Dozier, who was injured by a car bombing while reporting in Iraq, and Brigadier General Evelyn “Pat” Foote, who was the first female Army officer to command an Army brigade in Europe.

POWER President, Sarah Ragan, found the conference to be valuable: “NCCWSL provided an opportunity for me to critically analyze my personal leadership skills and address new forms of engagement with peers and fellow leaders across the nation concerning leadership and women’s issues.”

Women's Studies Featured Faculty: Dr. Lillian Joyce

If people ask me where I went to school, and I say Vassar, they immediately think of it as a women's college. It was, in fact, the first of the Seven Sisters schools to go co-ed. However, it continues to retain a strong tradition of educating and empowering women. It was there that I first discovered my love for ancient culture, and particularly the study of women's experience.

The study of antiquity is incredibly interdisciplinary. Evidence comes from many sources including the archaeological record and a diverse literature. One has to master ancient and modern languages. One gets to travel. My research has always been a labor of love, and it has taken me to amazing places: Italy, Greece, Egypt, Tunisia, Guatemala, and Peru.

One way I have been able to bring the world of ancient culture to Huntsville was by organizing a local society of the Archaeological Institute of America. Our lecture series has brought in eminent scholars, including the director of excavations at Easter Island and the phenomenal palace at Knossos on Crete. We have also brought in numerous scholars who deal with women's experience in the ancient world. Recently, one debunked many of the myths about "cave women." Another examined the lives of women of all classes in a Roman villa in Portugal. Another looked at women's roles in Etruscan culture.

This semester I am teaching a course on Women in Antiquity that covers the ancient Near East, Egypt, Greece, and Rome. With the co-sponsorship of Women's Studies we have been able to bring in two Egyptologists to talk to the class, and then do a public lecture.

The class has been really exciting for me, as we engage in discussions of the position of feminist theory within an often highly conservative field. The students are also in the process of developing their research topics. One of my main goals in putting together this course is to explore how relevant the study of the ancient world is to understanding many of today's social conventions, including ones many women now reject.

Dr. Lillian Joyce points to the natural life inhabiting the Ara Pacis (the Augustan Altar of Peace) in Rome.

Dr. Kathleen Leonard Receives WEDC Foundation Education Award

Dr. Kathleen Leonard, UAHuntsville professor of civil and environmental engineering, was presented with the "Women Honoring Women" award in education from the Women's Economic Development Council Foundation on September 18. Dr. Leonard was among six women recognized for excelling in their fields of expertise and in their efforts to help others improve their quality of life.

Dr. Leonard is extremely active in local, national, and international professional engineering activities. She is a charter member of the North Alabama section of Society of Women Engineers (SWE) and, as advisor for the UAHuntsville chapter, she is a role model for female students and young faculty. An advocate for underrepresented groups, she spearheaded the creation of two endowed scholarships for women in engineering. She serves on the Women's Studies Program Advisory Committee, and she is the first female at UAHuntsville to become a full professor in the College of Engineering. She has received numerous teaching, service, and technical awards. In the community, she serves with the Flint River Conservation Association and other organizations of environmental benefit.
