

Philip Y. Kao, PhD

(He/him/his)

Philip Kao is a Foreign Affairs Officer in the State Department's Bureau of Political-Military Affairs (Regional Security and Arms Transfers Office). He is a former AAAS Science & Technology Policy Fellow as well as an alumnus of the Presidential Management Fellows program. Philip works on shaping policies that address the geopolitical and foreign policy implications of transferring emerging technologies and their usage in various defense articles and services. A major component of his portfolio consists of AUKUS (Pillars I and II), whereby he works closely with colleagues on creating a more enabling environment for AUKUS partner nation-states to share and collectively develop military advanced capabilities.

Philip has worked in financial services, DoD, and academia. He is passionate about science policy and science diplomacy, and although not a technical expert, he is optimistic about the acceleration of technology for societal gains. Last but not least, Philip is pursuing a Master's in Science and Technology Intelligence at the National Intelligence University.
