Enforcement Agencies Should Better Leverage Information to Target Efforts Involving U.S. Universities

GAO-22-105727 | June 14, 2022

Millions of foreign students and scholars study at U.S. universities, and many contribute to U.S. research. But, there's a risk that some may illegally access and share sensitive information, such as data or technology, with their home countries.

Agencies involved in addressing this threat said that outreach and education increases university officials' awareness of research security threats and builds stronger relationships with university officials.

To help prevent illegal transfers, we recommended that agencies determine which universities are at greater risk for such transfers and target outreach and education to them.
